

The Drinking Game

But the instructions themselves morph into stories and meld with the other short stories in the collection and everywhere one turns, the book plays its own game. The stories themselves are about games in form and content, elevating the concept from the silliness of Beer Pong to game as war in the tradition of Robert Coover's A Night At The Movies. The Drinking Game starts off as a conceptual piece based in low culture, taking the reader through a series of haunting stories dealing with 9/11, female Chechen suicide bombers, and the game of life in a world which is, like the game itself, a landscape of foreignness.
